To the barrier offered by inland taxation Mr. Huxford does not attach much importance, at least so far as it affects trade in the North, for foreign goods can now be transported almost everywhere in Central and Northern China under transit pass on payment of half import duty. Traders in the South do not enjoy this advantage, and that the numerous queue stations do not act as a very great barrier to trade is proved by the fact that goods being taken into the interior will frequently make circuitous and expensive detours in order to find a route where the taxation is less onerous. And even in the North the excessive taxation, though not applied directly to foreign goods, cannot fail to exercise a prejudicial influence on foreign trade. Mr. Huxford admits that it is true that native trade in native produce is hampered by unnecessary restrictions. As foreign imports have to be paid for by native products it follows that if trade in the latter be restricted trade in the former must likewise suffer. If China exported twice the quantity of tea that she actually does she would be able to buy a larger quantity of foreign imports; and that she does not export more tea is due to a large extent to the crushing nature of the taxation on the article, which is not confined to the export and transit duty, but includes also the gewer's tax and numerous other exactions to which the article has to submit before it comes under the observation of the foreign buyer. Inland taxation cannot be considered a small barrier to the extension of foreign trade, therefore, even where the transit pass system is in force.

Needless to say, however, that we quite agree with Mr. Huxford as to the importance of improving the means of communication in China. He mentions that in the four years from 1884 to 1888 the foreign trade of Japan is said to have doubled, which he ascribes to the extension of the railway system, and says a similar result may be expected in China when she imitates the example of her more progressive neighbour. But even without railways, and simply by the admission of steamers to the inland waters, a large extension of trade might be effected in China. The country has a magnificent system of natural waterways, wretchedly conserved, it is true, and so bringing calamities in the shape of floods, but serving admirably for means of communication. If small steamers and launches were allowed to ply on these waters both native and foreign trade would be greatly increased. Seeing the progress made by Japan and the place she has taken in the country of nations, it is surprising that China should adhere so uncompromisingly to her old-world system. Even if she objected to the opening of more ports to foreign trade, there can be no sound reason why she should not allow her own people to avail themselves of the advantages of the use of steam on her inland waters.

It will be a case of Polo at Canoway Bay at 2.30 p.m. to-day.

We have to acknowledge receipt of the Report for the year 1888-89 of the Mission Schools connected with the Berlin Missionary Society in China, by Mr. F. Habrich.

Sir William, Lady Alice, and the Misses Dow and Sir Frederick Weld were among the guests at a Garden Party given by the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House. The Queen was present.

From the Daily News we learn that the British steamer Imperial went ashore on Thursday night (14th inst.) at the anchorage of the river, marks at Woonong, that is, on the Potting side of the river. It was expected that she would get off on Friday night.

The last voyage out of the steamer Archibald, Capt. Lapage, which arrived at Shanghai on the 11th inst., in the Daily News says, the steamer Archibald left the river on the 17th inst., and has been made in forty days from Liverpool to Shanghai including all stoppages.

Commodore Richardson of the Stamess service, returned to Singapore on the 14th inst., from Klang where he had been supervising the salvage operations at the sunken Porter. The vessel coming to the anchorage of the 17th inst., near Fokentau. She was fired and four of her crew were injured, one of whom was taken to the Tug Wah Hospital, having a bullet wound in his left knee, on his arrival here.
